

I prefer the FCC does not take action on a national telephone no-call list. I live in Indiana and we have the perfect no-call program in place. Involvement by the FCC or any other part of the federal government would only result in a program that would be cumbersome, inefficient, expensive and ineffective and instead of protecting the consumer would instead work against them in favor of the telemarketers.

I would like all officials to consider that my telephone is my property and I pay a lot for the service. That does not make it immediately a tool for marketers and other solicitors.
